TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR VOLUNTEERS AND PARAPROFESSIONALS IN GERONTOLOGICAL SOCIAL WORK
(WORK with SENIOR CITIZENS)
September 23- October 13, 2006

About the Programme

Across the world, countries are experiencing population ageing. The growth rate of the elderly population is more rapid in developing countries like India than developed countries. Apart from demographic transitions, socio-economic and political changes together with increased individualism have altered living conditions of the elderly.

The elderly population in India is the second largest in the world, next only to China. This population, which was 77 million according to the 2001 census (7.5% of the total population), is projected to increase to 137 million by 2021. Three-fourth of the elderly population lives in rural areas. Their annual growth rate is higher (3%) as compared to the growth rate of the total population (1.9%). Population projections show that by 2050, the elderly population in India will surpass the population of children below 14 years.

Today, the elderly demand that society should not only ensure independence and participation, but also provide care, fulfillment and dignity. Limited understanding of factors influencing their quality of life is largely responsible for the elderly being denied a dignified existence. After all, the last stage of life holds as much potential for growth and development as earlier stages. The diversity among the elderly and varied interrelated influencing aspects from their environment needs significant consideration of researchers and policy planners.

Also, it is necessary to note that, Geriatric Care is a symbol of civilization. Attitudes towards the elderly widely differ from place to place. Traditionally, in India, the patriarchal joint family vested much authority in its aged members, as heads of the household. This, the elderly were respected and their advice sought. Care of the elderly was viewed as a duty of the younger family members. However, in today’s world of modernization and urbanization, this authority is being undermined. An introduction of statutory retirement amongst the working population has reduced the status of the aged to that of non-productive consumers. In addition, the pervasive space and resource crunches that characterize urban centers have degraded the status of the elderly even further. This is clearly reflected in the poor quality of care offered to them.

Ironically, on the other hand, technological breakthroughs and advances in medicine have offered the prospect of increased longevity. Thus, although the average life span has expanded, the quality of life extended to the 60 plus population is questionable. Yet, health problems and medical care are major concerns among a large majority of the elderly. It is obvious that people become increasingly susceptible to chronic disease, physical disability and mental incapacity as they grow older. The idea that old age is an age of ailments and physical infirmities is deeply rooted in the Indian psyche. Majority of the elderly refrain from seeking medical aid due to various impediments. Some refuse medical attention merely because traditionally they have never received such treatment. (Source: Ageing in India in the 21st Century: A Research Agenda, A Report from HARMONY India: February, 2006)

In terms of society’s response to the issues of Older Persons, both Governmental and Non-governmental initiatives are visible. The major areas of governmental focus are in the areas of providing financial security, assistance to voluntary organizations, making provisions in the constitution and promoting measures to improve the quality of life of the older persons

A large number of Non Governmental Organizations (NGOs) work for the care of the elderly at the National or State levels, some of them are Help Age India; Dignity Foundation; FESCOM (Federation of Senior Citizens Organizations in Maharashtra); INFA (Indian Federation of Aging); Anugraha and so on.

In the light of the above scenario, with regard to the care and welfare of Older Persons the main concerns that emerge are as follows:

- A wide and complex range of the issues pertaining to the elderly in a rapidly changing modern-day world

- A dearth of human resources adequately and specifically trained to make interventions effectively especially in the light of NGOs and CBOs depending on untrained or generically trained personnel to deliver services for elderly.

- An absence of systematic training facilities to adequately prepare manpower in the field of gerontology

- A need for developing a method for gauging the feasibility and relevance of the programme goals/objectives, content and methodology in order to enable in developing a CERTIFICATE IN GERONTOLOGICAL SOCIAL WORK
In order to respond to the above concerns in a systematic manner the Centre for Lifelong Learning, TISS and the Family Welfare Agency, Mumbai (a pioneer NGO for offering Day Care Services for Senior Citizens in Mumbai city) propose this “TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR VOLUNTEERS and PARAPROFESSIONALS in GERONTOLOGICAL SOCIAL WORK” from September 23 - October 13, 2006.
